IARPP Annual International Conference

International Association for Relational Psychoanalysis and Psychotherapy

CHANGING PSYCHOANALYSIS FOR A CHANGING SOCIETY RELATIONAL PERSPECTIVES

Society and psychoanalysis are changing. How do these changes affect each other?
What kind of psychoanalysis can be helpful for our changing society?

Psychoanalysis developed as a human science focused on subjectivity, emphasizing psychic processes that happen outside awareness or just on the limits of it, including self experience, states of self, and their corresponding organizing principles. It advocates comprehensive, explicative and enactive models that (through hermeneutic, heuristic and therapeutic methods) aim to reconstruct the self and recognize subjectivity. But, are subjective experience and its transformation the only aims of psychoanalysis? Can psychoanalysis contribute to a better understanding and transformation of tensions among individual-group-society? Is psychoanalysis able to re-think itself from the experiential worlds of 21st Century?

The Madrid IARPP conference aims to make explicit the various possible responses to the crisis in psychoanalysis. Specifically, it will address some of the major challenges and responses of contemporary relational psychoanalysis: 1) the adoption of a less authoritarian attitude, less omniscient analysts, more available to immerse themselves in patients' emotional worlds; 2) emotional and collaborative participation (spontaneity and authenticity) instead of neutrality as the ideal of the encounter; 3) considering that the reflective-verbal capacity is not the only (nor the main) therapeutic tool, emphasizing the transforming power of experience; 4) exchange with other disciplines such as, the neurosciences, infant research and attachment, genetics, and evolution; and 5) a subjectivity not walled off from its social origins thus allowing for a focus on groups and social relationships, and the community (national and transnational), to better understand individual and social experience and contribute to changing it.

This is a special relational psychoanalytic conference in the historic city of Madrid, Spain.
